

J. Anna Looney is an assistant professor in the Predoctoral Education division of RWJMS Department of Family Medicine. She holds Masters degrees in English Literature and in Sociology, and a doctorate in Sociology from Rutgers University. Dr. Looney is responsible for Community-based Education for undergraduate medical students which enables her to work collaboratively with organizations and agencies serving the under-served. Dr. Looney is also the Director of the Network of Affiliated Family Medicine Residencies. She mentors medical students in community service projects through the Distinction in Service to the Community (DISC) program. She has research experience in quality improvement interventions in primary care practices as an ethnographic data collector and facilitator in connection with the ULTRA and SCOPE projects. She has presented her research at STFM and NAPCRG conferences.